In appreciation for sustaining support of our literary enterprise, the Editors acknowledge with gratitude the generous contributions to the SCR Friends fund by Wayne K. Chapman and Janet M. Manson; H. Morris Cox; Frank and Patricia Day; Jeanne Frank; Daniel Galvin; Margie and John Idol, Jr.; Steven Katz; Thomas E. Kennedy; Eleanor R. Lee; Rob Roy McGregor; Ronald Moran; Kathleen Nalley; Roger B. Rollin, Joseph A. Scotchie, and Peter Serchuk.

Sample copy $17 per copy
One-year subscription (institutional) $33
One-year subscription (individual) $28
Two-year subscription (institutional) $47
Two-year subscription (individual) $40
Three-year subscription (institutional) $61
Three-year subscription (individual) $54

Subscribe and Order Copies from our Web Site
http://www.clemson.edu/cedp/cudp/scr/scrintro.htm
Miriam Mattsey is working on an MA in English and American Literature at Indiana State University. Her favorite poets include e.e. cummings, T. S. Eliot and Robert Bly.

Ken Monteith earned a PhD in English Literature from Fordham University in 2005 and in 2007, his dissertation was published as Yeats and Theosophy by Routledge Press. From 2006–9, Dr. Monteith was an assistant professor at LaGuardia Community College (City University of New York). Currently, he is living in Mexico while working on a book project, entitled Phantom Limbs / Fenian Bodies, which examines the roles of disabled individuals in Irish literature and culture.

Alexandra Poulain is Professor of Irish literature and theater at Université Charles de Gaulle—Lille 3 (France). She has written extensively on Yeats, Synge, Beckett and Tom Murphy. Her current research focuses on the motif of the Passion in Irish drama.

Thomas Dillon Redshaw teaches English at the University of St. Thomas, St. Paul, Minnesota, where he serves as director of Irish studies. Editor Emeritus of both Eire-Ireland and New Hibernia Review, Dr. Redshaw compiled a guide to the poetry of John Montague titled Will Dreams (Creighton University Press, 2004). He is at work on a cultural history of Liam Miller's Dolmen Press (1951–1987), portions of which have found a home in the pages of The South Carolina Review since 2007.

Ronald Schuchard is Goodrich C. White Professor of English and Irish Studies at Emory University. His The Last Minstrels: Yeats and the Revival of the Bardic Arts (OUP, 2004) and co-editor of Variants: The Journal of the European Society for Textual Scholarship and the Material Book, a special issue of Textual Scholarship and the Material Book, a special issue of The Reception of James Joyce in Europe (2004, with Geert Lernout) and Eire-Ireland, a special issue of The ACIS Robert Rhodes Prize for Books on Literature and Honorable Mention for the Book Prize of the Modernist Studies Association.

Hedwig Schwall teaches at the Catholic University of Leuven and University College Brussels in Belgium. She researches in contemporary Irish literature, psychoanalytic theory, and European art. Her recent publications focus on W. B. Yeats, Anne Enright, John Banville, and William Trevor. She is now preparing a study on The Hysteric Muse of W. B. Yeats. She is the director of the Leuven Centre for Irish Studies and president of EFACIS, the European Federation of Associations and Centres of Irish Studies.

Michael J. Sidnell is Emeritus Professor at the University of Toronto, where he sometimes acts as Director of both the Graduate Centre for Study of Drama and of Graduate Studies in English. His books include Dances of Death: the Group Theatre of London in the Thirties (Faber, 1984) and Yeats’s Poetry and Poetics (Macmillan, 1991). He has also co-edited three volumes of Yeats's dramatic manuscripts and stories, and two volumes of Sources of Dramatic Theory (Cambridge, 1991 etc).

Michael Cade Stewart is a doctoral student at the Institute of English Studies, University of London. His thesis explores the impact of Yeats's reading for the Oxford Book of Modern Verse (1936) upon his subsequent poetry.